Historical Description: “Declared as “the last of the important Revolutionary War sites yet to be properly explored,” the Fishkill Supply Depot remains so today: a one-of-a-kind site of national importance that has never gotten its due. Located in Fishkill, New York, the Depot was a key strategic center of the American Revolution, established and visited repeatedly by George Washington. Known as the “Military nerve center of the Continental army,” the Depot was one of three major encampments along with Morristown and Valley Forge. Hallowed history happened here - hundreds of the original soldiers who fought to found our nation died and were buried in unmarked graves.” –Fishkill Supply Depot

The Site: The Fishkill Supply Depot allows visitors to see the graves of the soldiers buried there after the American Revolution.
