Historical Description:

The vernacular stone house, now known as the Clinton House, was built in 1765. The foundations of the house are two feet thick and the walls are rough fieldstone with gabled ends made of wood. The house acted as a center of activity from 1777-1783, during which time Poughkeepsie acted as the state capital of New York. In 1783 a fire broke out and General George Washington ordered carpenters to rebuild this structure. At that time, the present stairway was constructed and the house was also enlarged. The house was later named in honor of George Clinton, the first governor of New York State who lived in Poughkeepsie for twenty-one years.

The Site:

The Clinton House is now the site of archives and a library available for local history research. The library is open by appointment only. There is an $8 fee to use the library. The site also offers a gift shop and brochures.
