Historical Description:

The home of Eleanor Roosevelt was originally built as a factory for Val-Kill Industries. Eleanor made this building a home in 1937, retiring to the modest home at Val-Kill, close to the Hudson River, after the death of her husband, President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Site:

The grounds of Val-Kill boast flower gardens, fields, trails and a pond. The site offers a guided tour of the fully furnished cottage. Some tours have a special themes, for example, one may focus on Eleanor's political activities domestically and abroad while another highlights aspects of her personal life. Visitors also have the option to participate in bird watching, nature walks and hiking.
