UTICA:
 BUILT 1836, at BROOKLYN.

HULL, OF WOOD; BUILT BY WM. CAPES. Length 180 feet; breadth of beam 21 1/2 feet; depth of hold 8 feet 4 inches.

ENGINE, VERTICAL BEAM CONSTRUCTED by the WEST POINT FOUNDRY. Diameter of cylinder 39 inches, by 10 feet stroke.

BOILER, OF IRON, ON DECK Length 18 feet; width 9 feet; height 8 feet.

WHEELS, RADIAL. Diameter 22 feet. length of buckets, 10 feet.

— TONNAGE 340 ⁶⁹ —

THE UTICA was built for the "People's Line," to run as a passenger boat on the Hudson River, between New York and Albany. She was one of the best of her time, and of good speed. She was used, at times, on the route between New York and Piermont, in connection with the N. Y. & Erie Rail road. Was finally converted into a towboat, and used as such on the Hudson River many years. Condemned Nov. 20, 1875, and broken up.

NOTE: Lawrence and Sneden's shipyard Herbert Lawrence and Benjamin Sneden was located at Corlear's Hook, near Water Street in New York City, and had a high reputation. Its specialty was building river steamboats. In the 1820s 400 men were employed in New York city shipyards; working hours were sunrise to sunset. A law passed in 1840 limited the workday to 10 hours. By that date ships' carpenters and caulkers were being paid two dollars a day.

This Afternoon Benjamin not Samuel Sneden to See the largest Steam boat ever built in the United States, 333 feet long, launched, not yet finished, Went on Board. William Lawrence Back from Rockland

NOTE: This might have been the Great Western, the longest passenger ship in the world, 251 feet not 333 feet in 1843. She was designed by Isambard Kingdom Brunel for the Great Western Steamship Company's transatlantic service between Bristol and New York. She was launched in 1837 and lengthened in 1840. Great Western was an iron strapped, wooden, side wheel paddle steamer, with four masts to hoist the auxiliary sails. The sails were not just to provide auxiliary propulsion, but also were used in rough seas to keep the ship on an even keel and ensure that both paddle wheels remained in the water, driving the ship in a straight line. The hull was built of oak by traditional methods. Wikipedia

NOTE: Sometime between 1843 and 1849 the Methodist Protestants, and especially the Gesner family, succeeded in building a small church. They had tried earlier but not been able to find suitable land for it.

Apparently their church was built on the corner of Closter Road, where the Palisades Post Office is located today, and was called “Gesner Hall” or the “Steepleless Church.” Sometime after Nicholas died it was abandoned, probably because the different Methodist groups had joined together and begun attending the large Methodist church built in 1858 59 close to the present Route 9W. The former Steepleless Church was used by Dr. Agnew to establish the first Palisades Library, which failed because of vandalism.

NOTE: The back of this photo, which comes from the Palisades library collection, reads: "Dr. Abraham Gesner from a photograph taken by W. D. O'Donnell, corner of George and Granville Street, Halifax, Nova Scotia. Dr. Abraham Gesner, born 1797, was a son of Henry Gesner of Cornwallis Nova Scotia and a Nephew of Nicholas Gesner of Rockland County NY."

Gesner first pursued a career at sea, but was shipwrecked twice by his early twenties. While studying medicine in London, he became interested in geology and later was appointed Provincial Geologist for New Brunswick. Gesner's research in minerals resulted in his 1846 development of a process to refine a liquid fuel from coal, bitumen and oil shale. His new discovery, which he named kerosene, burned more cleanly and was less expensive than competing products, such as whale oil.

THE NICHOLAS GESNER DIARY

Article from South of the Mountain, April-June 1990 issue

by Alice Munro Haagensen

Nicholas Gesner (1765-1858) of "Rockland," now Palisades, kept a diary in the first half of the 19th century, from 1829 to 1850, telling in detail about what he did and what happened around him. In spite of certain faults, Gesner was an exceptional man. Besides being an active farmer, he was a schoolteacher, surveyor and lawyer for his neighbors. He bought books regularly, and he commented on many matters of interest to present day readers. Although the diary is available only in the Palisades Library and its crabbed handwriting and many abbreviations have never been fully transcribed, it has been used by several historical and sociological researchers. Carl Nordstrom, in Frontier Elements in a Hudson River Village actually Nyack, quotes Gesner in detail throughout his book. Joan Geismar, in The Archaeology of Social Disintegration in Skunk Hollow: A Nineteenth Century Rural Black Community, often uses Gesner, a near neighbor of Skunk Hollow, to supplement what she learned from exploration, deeds, censuses and other official records. How the diary was saved for posterity is told in The Story of the Ferry by Winthrop Sargent Gilman, who lived in Palisades from 1861 till his death in 1923 and gathered a remarkable collection of historical material about the small hamlet:

When Mrs. William Sparks (daughter of the "Sally" of the "Diary," i.e., granddaughter of Nicholas Gesner removed from Palisades a few years since, she brought in a wagon to Mrs. Julia Denike's house, a large quantity of books and papers belonging to her grandfather. During all of one day she occupied herself in burning them. Many numbers of the "Diary" were destroyed at this time, since, to quote her words, there "was no use in keeping them around." Finally she turned to Mrs. Denike, saying, "I will not have time to burn them all, but you can burn the rest." After her departure Mrs. Denike did continue to destroy the papers, but her mother, the late Mrs. Abraham Post ... remonstrated, saying, "I wish you would not burn the Diaries, for I knew many of the people mentioned in them, and I like to hear about them." No more were burned after this. During the preparation of this paper, in 1898, the "Diary" was presented by Mrs. Denike to Winthrop S. Gilman, and by him to the Palisades Library.

In the 1950s, I often talked to Mrs. Adeline Van Blarcom, the daughter of Julia Denike, about her memories of Palisades. One day I learned that a couple of the "cahiers," Mr. Gilman's name for the separate parts of the diary, which Gesner called "Momentoes," had been withheld by her mother, undoubtedly because they referred to an old scandal. Eventually they were handed over to the Palisades Library to be added to the rest of the diary.

Mr. Gilman's first cahier was dated October 3, 1830, but he assumed that there had been many before this. One of the two from Mrs. Van Blarcom was dated April 25, 1829; however, the cover might be interpreted as being the first. It reads: "The following is a Memomento [sic], or Memorial, without any Design of Debt or Credit or charge or demand." (As one reads on, one will be better able to judge the accuracy of this disclaimer.

At first glance, the diary seems to be a straightforward account of a farmer's life, with constant weather bulletins and an emphasis on church affairs, interspersed with cryptic references and abbreviations, but as one reads on, they begin to make more and more sense. Suddenly there is a jolt, and one almost finds oneself in a Victorian novel, full of intense feeling, religious fervor and dramatic scenes.

One learns that Gesner had an obsessive interest in his widowed niece by marriage, Mary Quidor Concklin, or "Pol. Conck," usually referred to in the diary by what can only be described as a squiggle. This obsession filled his life for the first two years of the diary and caused quarrels with his children and her children, not to mention frequent flare-ups with Polly herself

Apparently Polly had found herself in financial trouble after her husband Jacob died in 1811, and Gesner came to the rescue. Perhaps dating from this time, he seemed to have a hold on her and expected her to give him meals, make his shirts, wash and mend his clothes, and supply who knows what other services. This was true even though he was ostensibly living at home with his wife Gracy Post and often entertaining relatives and friends.

In spite of his protest on the cover, the first part of the diary, long withheld, includes an account of the many days Polly spent away from home, visiting relatives or working as a midwife even that seems to have been a grievance to Nicholas and of the few scanty meals she gave him. When she was at home, he complained that there always seemed to be a visiting relative dividing her attention, even if it sometimes was only one of her young grandsons. Nicholas Gesner, who was there several times a day, must have been a disturbing presence, whether censorious or a bit too friendly.

The relationship between Nicholas and Polly, as described in the diary, is hard to define. In their many arguments Polly accuses Nicholas of "jawing, jawing, jawing," and says she will let no one tell her what to do. According to Nicholas, he answers her calmly and reasonably but writes passionately about her "miserable lyes" and "most bitter temper." Then when he returns to her house, usually a short time later, his description of his reception is often an ambiguous "friendly."

There is not much of sociological interest in the first two years of the diary, but the intense attention focused on a small group of neighboring families makes for a particularly detailed background which gives interest and meaning to many later entries.

Gesner's daily descriptions of the weather serve to set the scene, as is done in an old fashioned novel. They also bring Gesner to life as the man described by the Denikes, who lived next door. They remembered his "coming to the front door .. to observe the weather just before retiring." They also recalled that he "used to have a bandanna handkerchief over his head at meetings" (Gilman, Palisades Notes, page 180 .

Polly's Family

Polly Concklin lived on a lane west of Closter Road in the old John Gesner house "o.ho." in the diary. Her husband Jacob, whose mother was Nicholas Gesner's sister Elizabeth, had bought the house from his father. Most of the action described by Gesner took place while she lived there. In 1832, she moved out and not long after, it was torn down.

Three of Polly's daughters and one son lived nearby on parcels of land inherited from their grand father, Jacob Concklin. Their houses are all just over the state line in what is now Rockleigh, New Jersey. They have been studied in detail by Reginald McMahon, a Bergen County historian who made plentiful use of the Gesner diary. Although Polly's husband had left the old house to the youngest son, Nicholas, he preferred to live elsewhere as did his brother Jacob.

Polly's daughter Elizabeth Dubois — "Bets," or "Bs" in the diary — especially disapproved of her mother's relations with Gesner and often sent her young son, Ephraim, to stay with Polly, as a "guardian," Gesner once said angrily. There is said to be a ghost in the Dubois house, a severe-looking woman in black. Perhaps this is Bets, still disapproving.

Another daughter, Mary Anne, married Albert "Obb" Cooper, of a nearby large Dutch family, who are chiefly remembered nowadays for their unusual nicknames. Obb's brother James was called "Cose," Cose's wife was "Wynchy," his daughter, "Tyney," and his sister Hanna, "Nautchy" or "Naut." Cose and Obb often worked for Gesner on his farm.

The third daughter, Phebe Van Wickel, "Pe" in the diary, and her husband, Richard, lived across the road from the other two. It was to her house that Polly went for refuge when the situation with Nicholas became intolerable.

The son, John Gesner Concklin, "J.G.C." in the diary, who lived next door to Phebe, was a bitter enemy of Gesner. One time, on June 20, 1832, when Cose and Obb Cooper were hauling a load of dung for Nicholas on a right of way across the Concklin property, J.G. forcibly stopped them and struck Cose with a club. Nicholas heard the quarrel and approached. He wrote later:

Above all provoking abusive and scandalous abuses this was the most daring, malicious and hell like of all ever I saw or heard and where a persons life seemed More in Danger with his club than this. his eyes sparkled with the most hellish looks that I ever was acquainted with.

According to Gesner's account, his own reply was almost saintly. When he in turn was threatened by Concklin, who "swore the bitterest oaths ever heard," he picked up the dung fork in self-defense, but soon put it down and turned away with a mild protest.

Polly's two other sons came often to visit her, much to Gesner's annoyance. Nicholas was a gun smith. According to McMahon, he worked in New York City in the summer and Georgetown, South Carolina in the winter. Gesner seems to have had amicable relations with him, as he did with Jacob, except when he had been drinking. Jacob's visits were a mixed pleasure to his mother because his wife Elmira was always making trouble. At one time there was a real scandal. Gesner described it on April 1, 1831:

P[hebe] came down. She Ja[cob] Concklin] & Elmira had high Conversation Ab[out] Richard Van Winklers attempt on the Body and Chastity of said Elmira, who said that he made an attempt on her in the house and Running A Round the stove. She fled out Doors and hid behind the Apple Brush back of little house. That Rich[ard] Came and looking for her, he went to Nicholas Barrack, with that she Ran into the house Again, locked the Door That Rich ar d came to the Door and forced it open

When, later, Jacob died suddenly, Gesner gave a lurid account on October 2, 1832 under the heading "Jacob Concklin Dead. But how did he come Dead. Elmira his unlawful Wife a Stinking Beast."

This Day we Had correct information that Jacob Concklin Died, being ill abt 3 only Hours. Died yesterday about 9 ock o'clock A.M. It is also Related that Elmira his unlawful wife a few Days Ago While Ja cob Conck li n was up at Rockland Went to be Married again. The Carriage overset & She broke her arm which interrupted this Beastly Woman from performing this act. But cir cumstances present to the Mind the question. Dont you think perhap a Dosse sic of Laudanum or poison has been taken or Given him. He was married to her & she had a husband living & no divorce a stinking beast.

Gesner's Family

Nicholas Gesner lived over the New Jersey state line in New York on Closter Road in a beautiful old house, still standing. There is in front a very old white oak tree, which is said to have been planted by his wife Gracy when she was a little girl.

Poor Gracy, one wonders what she was doing while her husband was scandalizing the neighborhood! One imagines her to be a faithful, dumpy little woman, probably a poor cook, and not very bright. She is on record as asserting herself once, in connection with a meeting of the "class," a small group of fervent Methodists who met during the week in various houses to pray together. When it came time to meet at the Gesners, Gracy refused to allow Polly to enter her house. At the next meeting Nicholas was taken to task for "breaking up the class." He replied indignantly that far from doing so, he had offered to leave Gracy and go to live with their daughter, Sally Lawrence, so the class could all meet at the Lawrences'.

Sally was married to Jonathan Lawrence, son of Jonathan Lawrence, Jr., the village's Revolutionary War hero, and great grandson of the Jonathan Lawrence who had owned the historic Big House and most of the land in the center of Rockland Palisades see South of the Mountains, April June 1977 for more on Jonathan Lawrence, Jr. . They lived either in the Big House or in a house on the west side of the present Route 9W. Either place was large enough so that they could put up most of the many visiting Methodist preachers, who then often held services in the house. Nicholas sometimes housed the preacher's horse and wagon.

Sally and Jonathan didn't seem to get involved in the family scandal at all. Gracy often stayed with them, and often she and Nicholas, Sally and "Jon. Law" would go to church services together. There was a pleasant interlude on September 15, 1831 when Nicholas took their little daughter Mary crabbing in the river.

Gesner's son Herbert lived in a house on the corner where the Palisades Library now is and had a cobbler shop there. His father thought he charged too much. He wrote on April 18, 1842, "At Herbert's one half sole and apiece for a welt, 1 shilling. (Its too much) unpaid." Next day he wrote, "I mended my shoe." (Gilman remembered the cobbler shop being there still in the 1860s).

His other son Jacob was sometimes critical of his father for his treatment of Gracy. Nicholas described one conversation on June 6, 1832, after Gracy's hens had scratched up a few hundred of the corn hills Nicholas had just planted:

Ja co b Ges ne r Abused me very much about the fowls, the destroyed Corn because I found fault with his Mother not being ambitious in trying to help get the fowl. Stayd out late last n igh t instead of coming home soon to help catch them. I told him I had not Abused his Mother. I asked and seriously requested him to tell me what I had done, that if I had done anything wrong I was willing to acknowledge it & that I wished to know. He ans were d I was not worth talking to further.

One can feel Jacob's exasperation. When he married Elizabeth, or Bets, Cooper on October 15, 1831, Nicholas didn't go probably was not invited but described the wedding in detail:

Jacob Gesner went to Get Married abt 2 ock PM. with Bets Cooper and was Married. Started from Old Coopers at John Willse's I think or expect that the Revd Mr Cole Tappan married them. from thence to Slote had supper at Ab raha m Sarvents, had 3 Waggon besides his namely, David Mann of Geo Mann and peggy Riker of Ja[cob] Riker) the Groomsman and Bridesmaid — and George Law[ren]ce & Eliza Willse and Abraham Post son of Ja cob Post and Naut Cooper. The Married Couple Returned to Old Coopers in N igh t. N.B. they had each Couple a one horse Waggon A Beautiful Day.

The first phase of the diary ended in February 1832 when Polly moved in with Phebe, and Gesner's relationship with her was abruptly ended. On February 25, Gesner wrote, in part (there are five closely written pages in the diary giving his side and explaining how blameless he was :

There is a mis erab l e malicious and wicked talk in the neighborhood. The Report Runs that M ary C oncklin has said that she left Old house and w en t to Pe that I should come no more there that she had told me to keep away ... Pe bade me to come there no more to Make the people talk about her Mother who had moved th ere with her father old Peter Quidor it must be Remem bere d that M Conck told me the same Day I think that... she had thought to move the Old Man her father to Pe that there was 2 or 3 who had given her Notice to be Ready to attend their wives as midwife and if she should be called it would not do to leave the old man th ere alone, the Brook high, &c She moved him and also s[ai]d she would be there a few Days herself &c Now the report in circulation is that she had to leave Old Ho that I would be coming and I would not stay away.

They seem to have had only one more real conversation after the move, on March 15, when Polly tried to explain, saying that "she was so beat and so struck, and so mortified that she didn't know what to do." After that Gesner saw her only in passing, generally in the company of Richard Van Wickel. Polly and her father must have crowded the house uncomfortably. The Van Wickels had at least one and probably three children at the time, and Reginald McMahon describes the house as "a small tall narrow dwelling, consisting of a hallway, one large room with fireplace and brick chimney, and stairs leading to a garret of two rooms." Old Peter Quidor died about a month later. Polly lived until 1838. Nicholas Gesner wrote:

Jan. 6. Mary Concklin daughter of old Peter Quidor and the widow of Jacob Concklin died this afternoon about 2 o'clock. Her death seems to have been unexpected.

Jan. 7. Mary Concklin Buried this afternoon about 4 o'clock, near SunSet; I not there. A Respectable Burying. A large number. They never gave word to Nicholas Concklin [her son] of her death, which was unexpected; but hurried her into the grave in the Burying ground of John Gesner of Rockland.

Her burial was almost the last in the small Gesner Concklin Burying Ground on the Gesner property, and hers is now one of only three stones still standing. One wonders why the grave is outside the low wall of the burying ground, although there was room for one more grave inside. Perhaps she had killed herself, life being too hard for the poor woman, and was not allowed to be buried in consecrated ground.

The Methodist Church

After Polly moved out of the old house, Gesner turned more of his attention to church matters. There were two rival branches of the new Methodist Church in the small village of Rockland. One, the Methodist Episcopal Church, or Old Side, had the advantage of a well to do adherent, Moses Taylor. He lived over the border in New Jersey but devoted his resources to helping the church in Rockland. He helped them build first a small building north of the Big House on the road to Sparkill, then, in 1859, the large impressive one across the road, which is now the antique shop, Yonder Hill Dwellers.

The other branch, the Reform Methodists, held its own for some time with the help of Nicholas Gesner's determination, pious intensity and power of invective. It even succeeded in building, in about 1850, a small "steepleless church" near where the present post office is, called Gesner Hall. For a long time, however, the Reform Methodists met in private houses or at the schoolhouse in New Landing, today's Piermont. Visiting preachers would ride the circuit and, in between their visits, the devoted church members would meet together in "classes" to pray, confess and reinforce their deep religious feelings. They believed that without constant religious struggle they would fall from grace.

According to the diary, there was animosity between the two groups. Gesner writes that "Moses Taylor etc." were "circulating their venom against Reform." On January 21, 1835, he writes: "The barefaced impertinence practiced by the greater part of the Old Side, this seeming Sanctity under all their Wicked Strategems &c are truly despicable."

In the cahier dated June 3, 1832, Gesner replies to certain criticisms of his attitude by milder members of his class by a rather confusing explanation:

He never said anything about the Doctrines they Preached exclusive of the Church government, nor had any Design to be understood any further than that much which bore on Resemblance thereto in Aristocratic and Absolute power.

At both churches the services were full of excitement. On September 27, 1833, Gesner writes of a Reform preacher: "He is a great singer. He is considerable noisy in his devotion." Of the Old Side he writes on November 5, 1834:

Methodist Episcopal meeting I have been informed was attended with Great shout ings. A.V Sturr, their local preacher and present School master in District No. 1. He is among the people pulling and haling sic a few young people into the altar. Jesse Trenchard's wife fell. The whooping and screaming in the Meeting House was never equalled in this place.

He describes a camp meeting lasting from September 18 to September 24, 1832, which took place on George Mann's property west of the village and north of what is now Oak Tree Road. There were usually two or three hundred attending, but on the 23rd there were more than a thousand.

Members and mourners and many others, experience related in an extraordinary manner. God with us a blessed time, singing and praising God. A farewell sorrowful parting with tears. May it be long remembered.

Not everyone in the village was a Methodist, however. Gesner reports a discussion with Herbert Lawrence, Jonathan's older half brother, on August 22, 1832:

I & Herbt Law[ren]ce. Argument on the Way of Salvation. It appears he supported the idea that what Christ had suffered on the Cross &c was nothing to Man's Salvation, that Christ was only a Man, possessing more of the Divine nature than any other Man, that Christ was only an example to us, that what he suffered on the Cross was nothing to us, and that it was only Christ within us &C, & further there will be no Resurrection of the Body, that Man was not conceived in Sin and brought forth in iniquity, that the Spirit which was given to every Man was all that was Necessary. Follow its Dictates.

Remarkably, Gesner makes no comment in the diary on these iconoclastic sentiments.

The Brower Concern

After Polly and his church, one of Gesner's absorbing interests was what he called "The Brower Concern." His mother Famiche Brower was supposed to have been a direct descendant of Anneke Jans, whose granddaughter married Jacobus Brower. Anneke Jans was a reputed illegitimate descendant of William the Silent of Holland and in the 17th century had owned 62 acres in downtown New York, including the site where Trinity Church was built. The property was bought from her, taken over by the king of England and ended up in the possession of the church. Her descendants never acknowledged the legality of the process.

At least 12 of the interconnected families in Rockland Palisades were among the thousands of descendants of Anneke Jans. Every so often a lawyer would take up the case and circularize the ever growing group of seekers after fortune. One such case was in process in the 1830s, and Gesner often went to New York City to consult with lawyers and other interested parties, backed financially by many of his relatives in the village. Like many others before and after, this case failed, benefiting only the lawyers. The practice was ended by the disbarment in 1913 of the latest lawyer to circularize the descendants with the aim of bringing another suit.

No doubt the prospect of royal descent and possible riches provided rosy dreams for Gesner and his neighbors, but unfortunately they never had a chance of materializing. Recent studies have proved that Anneke Jans had no connection with the Dutch royal family and that Famiche Brower was descended only from a brother of the Jacobus Brower who married Anneke Jans's granddaughter.

Even if these facts had not come out, a writer, Munsell, who narrated the Anneke Jans story in 1870, wrote, "It has been calculated that if their ancient farm in New York, now in possession of Trinity Church, and supposed to be worth several millions, was recovered and equally apportioned among all who claim to be descendants of Anneke Jans, it would give them about twenty shilling apiece."

* * * * *

Although in the early years Gesner's first interest was in keeping an eye on Polly Concklin and later in continually reaffirming his religion and seeking fortune through "The Brower Concern," he also noticed and commented on what went on around him in his vicinity and in the world. The diary is a wonderful resource for anyone studying almost any aspect of that period of Rockland County history.

Joan Geismar, for example, making a study of Skunk Hollow, the settlement of free blacks on the "mountain" south and east of the village, was able to find several pertinent quotations, in particular the interesting account on November 19, 1841 of the life of Jack Earnest, one of the first settlers:

Last Night Jack Earnest at Home laid himself before the fire probably in his sleep his clothes took fire got outdoors, and before he could get his clothes off was mortally burnt Was about 71 years old and was born in My fathers house, a Slave I bought him of My father John Gisner sic when he was about 23 year old for 80 which is 200 dollars as I ever was opposed to slavery, I told him after he had served me 7 or 8 years I would set him free...But after he had been with me one year or thereabouts my brotherinlaw Jacob Concklin By flattery and persuasion, promising him a piece of ground to Raise Some potatoes & Broom-corn for himself that Jack was overpersuaded; promised him to set him free after 7 or 8 years I told Jack how Concklin would Serve him, being acquainted with Cs disposition as a Miser ... Concklin detained him untill sic he had stay'd 14 years instead of 7 or 8. Now Jack being determined to stay no longer, twitting C that I had told him how he Concklin would serve him, Concluded to let him go on Condition Jack would secure him One hundred Dollars!!! ... After he left Concklin ... acquired for himself a Nice little property by hard Industry the Surname Earnest was Attached to him Because he was in great Earnest when purchasing some land in the Mountain.

Gesner's Economy

Carl Nordstrom, on his part, found enough indications in the diary of Gesner's way of life to characterize him as a frontiersman, independent, resourceful, self-sufficient. (The only frontier characteristic lacking was isolation. Gesner lived in a close complex of related families. He describes in Frontier Elements in a Hudson River Village how Gesner supported himself

Nicholas Gesner was primarily a farmer. He devoted part of his efforts to subsistence production and the remainder to a cash crop which he sent to New York City ... Among the crops Gesner produced for sale in New York were apples, raspberries, currants, and potatoes. He also gathered nuts and cut firewood. [He also is on record as sending flowers, chickens and lamb] ... In addition to his farming, Gesner served as surveyor, schoolteacher, and sometime lawyer for his neighbors. In his youth he had been a boatbuilder Gesner was also active politically ... During the War of 1812 he ... eventually rose to the rank of Colonel the Gesner farm of the 1830s operated on a mixed currency basis involving both cash and barter.

Nordstrom analyzes Gesner's accounts for the months of July to September 1834, when they happened to be comparatively complete, and finds that for the three months his reported income was 6.41 and his expenses 13.52. What Nordstrom neglects to mention, although it is of interest to those living in the vicinity today, is his taxes. For his 30 acres of farming land in New Jersey he paid taxes in 1830 of 90 cents; but they went way up in 1832:

Jersey Collector came to collect taxes. I was taxed for 30 acres of land 3.20, and old Campbell in Closter for 30 acres 1.17 I think it was 15 or 17 cents, look at it I did not now pay it.

Diseases and Injuries

The diary contains interesting information on many subjects, not only facts from a conscientious observer but striking or pertinent stories. One interested in the medical history of the time, for instance, can find references to cholera in New York City and even in Piermont, smallpox in a small house near the waterfall south of the landing and how the villagers rallied to help, and many indispositions in his neighbors and himself and how they were treated.

He describes on June 19, 1832 how his son Herbert was injured:

Some years ago by a bank and large Rock falling on him near Snedens Landing, and mortification, first the loss of his foot. Then the ankle off, and perhaps a year afterwards by reason of not healing and intolerable misery increasing Again, he was obliged to go down to New York in the first of the winter and had his leg taken off just below his knee, I, Nicholas Gesner his father, was present. Dr. Mott, surgeon no doubt the famous Dr. Valentine Mott, the Professor of Surgery at the College of Physicians and Surgeons with 8 or 9 young students present.

Then there is the account on June 21, 1836 of Gracy's bizarre ailment:

Gracy is much troubled with the animal on her Stomach and throat, is quite Sick seems all that can be done cannot destroy it one year and more is elapsed with this Plague in her Stomach, frequently and quickly fly's up in her throat, almost chokes her. Harsh medicine sends it down a Moment, but starts up again as though it would flee from the severity of the Stuff taken—large portions of the spirits of turpentine has been taken; Doctors medicine and every harsh attempt to destroy it has hitherto failed. It has been suggested that this may have been hiatus hernia.

Boating

Gesner's diary contains many references to boat building, boat trips to New York and boats. In general, he describes one trip to New York on May 11, 1831, which started in a schooner and ended in a steamboat:

Went New York from home about 9 or 10 o'clock .. Went with John Willse & Geo Quidor from Snedens [In the margin he adds, "Gracy w(en)t too."] a Violent South Wind. first Single Reef. Then Double Reef, just below ? the Leech Rope or Mainsal Broke and tore the Sail Amazing. There was a terrible Swell We got in near West Shore, where it was more Calm. The Rockland Steam boat came near Along. They Attended to our Signal took from the Schooner Abt 15 passengers, and Got in abt 4 o'clock PM. John and George Got in the same night late &c.

He was present at a couple of incidents showing the intense rivalry between steamboats on the Hudson. On May 28, 1831, after a trip to New York to see about "The Brower Concern," he wrote:

Back from N York abt 3 o'clock to Snedens at first start the 2 Steam Boats Orange [from Nyack, captained by the hotheaded Isaac Smith] & Rockland [from Piermont] Crowded Against each other and Jambled Yawl Boat all to pieces. The Rockland was outside The Orange was better than 12 ft clear of Dock and instantly past the end of Dock.

In 1837, he reports that the Arrow from Nyack, captained by that same Isaac Smith, ran at the Warren from Haverstraw with the intention of ramming her amidships:

Went on board the Arrow State Prison Dock ... Arrow ran up on the Warren Side by Side, Arrow next east Shore Running no other course but parallel with the Shore at sufficient distant off ... The Arrow in which I was on board, crowded towards the Warren who continued directly forward. Then the Arrow slacked her motion and Rounded against the Warren aft of her center, carried her Stern Around and brought the Warren Across her bow of Arrow touching hard This excited a lamentable outcry on Board the Warren. The moment appeared perilous, however the Warrens bow was partly forced down the river the Arrow passed by her Stern and proceeded. Capt. Isaac Smith of the Arrow pretended that the Capt of the Warren intended to crowd him on the Shore I told Smith that he had done wrong to Hazzard so many that I was an Eye Witness Some hotheaded men on board said they would have run her over if they could. I answered, would you endanger the lives of 150 or 200 person, &c.

The Revolutionary War

The occasion of the visit of Nicholas's older brother Abraham and his daughter Maria from Nova Scotia in July 1834 started him on reminiscences of the Revolutionary War:

N.B. It may not be improper here to note that our Father and Mother, namely John Gesner and Famiche Gesner Brower wished to remain neutral in the war of the revolution, refused to sign the Association dreading consequences, was called a tory but truly he was a peaceable man in every Respect threatenments were made, and his sons grown up were Menaced to be taken and brought to New England and confined in dungeons (or mines), violence was used in many places and with many. Father Gesner, now abt 52 or 53 years old, admonished his sons, Jacob, Isaac, Henry, and Abraham to take opportunity & go to New York now in possession of the English. With some others after Father Gesner had admonished them to be good boys, went off with an open Small Pettiauger belonging to Dennis Sneden who went also from Snedens, &c.

Nicholas, being a boy of 11 at the time, stayed at home with his parents. He goes on to describe what happened to his brothers after that. Father Gesner sent them to an acquaintance, one Bayard. Isaac found work as a tailor, but the other three went to Staten Island and cut wood for one dollar a day. Eventually they were enrolled in a regiment commanded by Colonel Bayard. They served as guards at Powles Hook and Hoboken and were later taken to Halifax, Nova Scotia, like so many other Loyal ists. Henry and Abraham settled there, acquired large farms and had 12 children each.

With all that has been written about Gesner's diary, the surface has hardly been scratched. Gilman, McMahan, Nordstrom, Geismar and perhaps others may have skimmed through the whole 21 years of the diary; but only the first two or three years have been transcribed. Who knows what treasures may turn up when the whole diary is studied?

NICHOLAS GESNER

from pages 47-51 of Frontier Elements in a Hudson River Village by Carl Nordstrom

...Nicholas Gesner, our second diarist, owned a farm that straddled the border between the states of New York and New Jersey at Palisades, a neighborhood located near the southeastern part of Rockland close by the Hudson River. From his diary, dated in the 1830s and '40s, we find that Gesner still lived in much the same manner as Tunis Smith had lived at Greenbush at the turn of the century, Gesner was born in 1765, well before the Revolution, and died in 1858 at the age of 93. He was the youngest son of one John Gesner, who had purchased land near Tappan in the 1730s and settled there. Nicholas spent his whole life in Rockland. Throughout, he must have been an exceedingly sturdy individual; it is clear from his diary that he was active and involved in local matters until he was a very old man. In 1835, at the age of 70, he recorded the state census for Orangetown, traveling over most of his territory on foot while completing the survey. In his diary, an entry dated 1841 mentions walking from his home in Palisades to the Slote New Landing Piermont out of curiosity. He took the walk with a neighbor, he says, to view the railroad works standing at the end of the "long pier" at Piermont. These works, which had recently been completed, were designed to provide terminal services for the Erie Railroad which was then under construction in Rockland. The round trip between Palisades and Piermont is about five miles, and the grade is quite steep in one or two places along the road.

Nicholas Gesner was primarily a farmer. He devoted part of his efforts to subsistence production and the remainder to a cash crop which he sent to New York City in the care of his son, Jacob, for sale. Travel between the city and the various river landings in Rockland was already commonplace in the 1830s, when Gesner began writing in his diary, and farmers who lived near the landings had little difficulty arranging with boatmen to carry their produce to market. Among the crops Gesner produced for sale in New York were apples, raspberries, currants, and potatoes. He also gathered nuts and cut firewood.

In addition to his farming, Gesner served as surveyor, schoolteacher, and sometime lawyer for his neighbors. In his youth he had been a boatbuilder, and in 1836 when evil reports were being circulated about a boat then on the ways at Nyack, he was called there to inspect the hull and judge its seaworthiness. Gesner was also active politically and the party intermittently repaid him for his support with patronage appointments such as the census work mentioned earlier. During the War of 1812 he saw service with the militia and eventually rose to the rank of Colonel. He served as trustee on the school board and, as a dedicated, articulate, and argumentative Methodist, he devoted much of his time to the "glorious work of God." Yet, respected and trusted with important neighborhood affairs as he was, he still had his practical community responsibilities. The 70-year-old patriarch was still obligated for his allotted two days a year of physical labor repairing the county roads. Some years he worked himself, along with his neighbors; in other years he lent his wagon in lieu of his physical presence.

He used the diary both as an account book and as a record of agreements

In producing goods for market as well as for subsistence, the Gesner farm of the 1830s operated on a mixed currency basis involving both cash and barter. Often the cash was used to strike a balance in transactions primarily involving the barter of goods and services. A review of the Gesner accounts for three months July September, 1834 provides a description of his ordinary transactions.* In addition to the money he earned at the New York City farmers' market, Gesner received a cash income from his many school, surveying, and legal service activities. In partnership with Jacob Gesner he purchased clams and oysters from river fishermen and peddled them throughout the Palisades neighborhood. When funds were short Gesner borrowed from his more prosperous neighbors. Such loans seem to have been given for short terms at six percent with extensions possible should the need arise; they were formalized in writing. There were no banks in Rockland at the time.

Gesner's routine expenditures were chiefly for groceries to supplement the produce of his own farm, for farm and household equipment, for taxes, and for labor. Approximately half his expenditures for the three months were for groceries. Three rough categories can be discerned from an examination of the Gesner grocery list. First, there were the import products from overseas, including sugar, salt, tea, rice, molasses, and chocolate. According to the local historian, Dr. Frank Green, such goods were bartered for local products even during the earlier phase of the agrarian period, prior to the time when communication between Rockland and the city had been regularized. Cloth, butter, and eggs, for example, might be exchanged for tea, coffee, tobacco, sugar, and crockery. The second category of food routinely purchased was fish, which Gesner obtained from neighbors who owned land adjacent to the river and fished as well as farmed. Finally, Gesner also purchased beef and flour — indicating thereby the degree to which market oriented farm production had already displaced subsistence production in his neighborhood by 1834.

From time to time Gesner purchased farm tools and household equipment from local merchants. These were people who kept stores in their houses, which generally were located at points convenient to transport and communication, such as a river landing or next to a junction on the King's Highway. They also farmed. Over the three month period in 1834 Gesner spent, for all purposes, a total of 106 shillings nine pence. Of that sum, only fourteen shillings were spent on items other than food or labor. A scythe and material for repairing a chair comprised the largest part of these residual expenditures. In addition to purchases of farm tools and household equipment, Gesner also bought paper and numerous books for his library. These books seem to have been the only "luxury" items he bought. They were mainly on religious subjects and ordinarily were purchased from itinerant peddlers.

Other than food, labor was the most important expenditure item. Approximately one third of Gesner's outlays from June through September paid for the labor of the hands on his farm. Included in the labor account were both cash and barter transactions. One such hand received four shillings 50 cents at the standard exchange rate plus a half pint of rum for a day's work. For boy's work he paid a shilling a day. He hired his helpers by the day or part thereof, and settled his accounts with them on either a daily or monthly basis. Such workers were often neighbors, farmers themselves, or farmers' sons; others were day laborers who worked from farm to farm regularly. Because Gesner was sick for approximately half of the three month period, it is probable that his labor outlays were larger than normal. During his sickness work continued on the farm under the supervision of his son Herbert, who lived nearby and was a cobbler by trade.

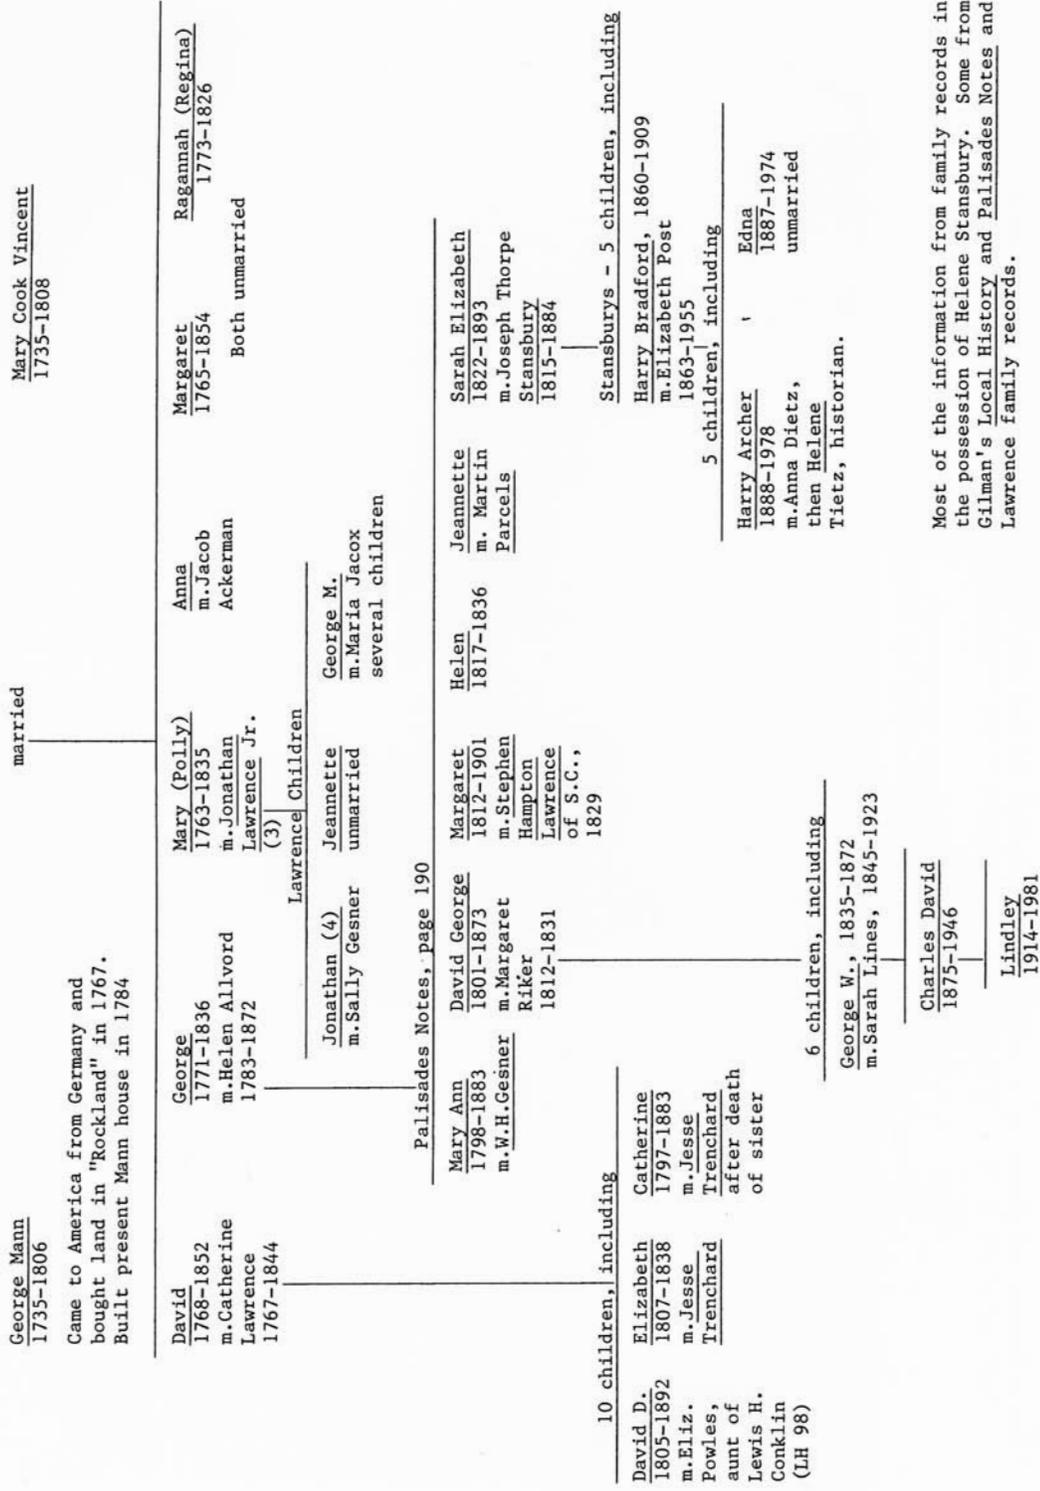

With the exception of property taxes, Gesner's other outlays involved payment in kind of one form or another. He carried his own Indian corn and rye to a nearby miller for milling. The miller's fee was set, in the one case reported, at one tenth by weight of the total product. The farm also sent yarn to the weaver and fuller to be manufactured into cloth. In addition to maintaining the house, Gesner's wife, Gracie, spun the wool into yarn, supervised the cloth production, and kept chickens which she sent to New York for sale. Her accounts were often recorded separately from those of her husband.

Both Tunis Smith and Nicholas Gesner spent their lives in the gray area between two critical moments of social development. They were born into a society dominated by frontier type economic relationships, that is by subsistence farming carried out by relatively isolated households. During their lifetimes trade relationships with New York City expanded considerably and were formalized. These new relationships provided a major impetus to the development of village communities in Rockland later in the nineteenth century. The testimony of Smith and Gesner, however, is rooted in ordinary existence on back country farms.

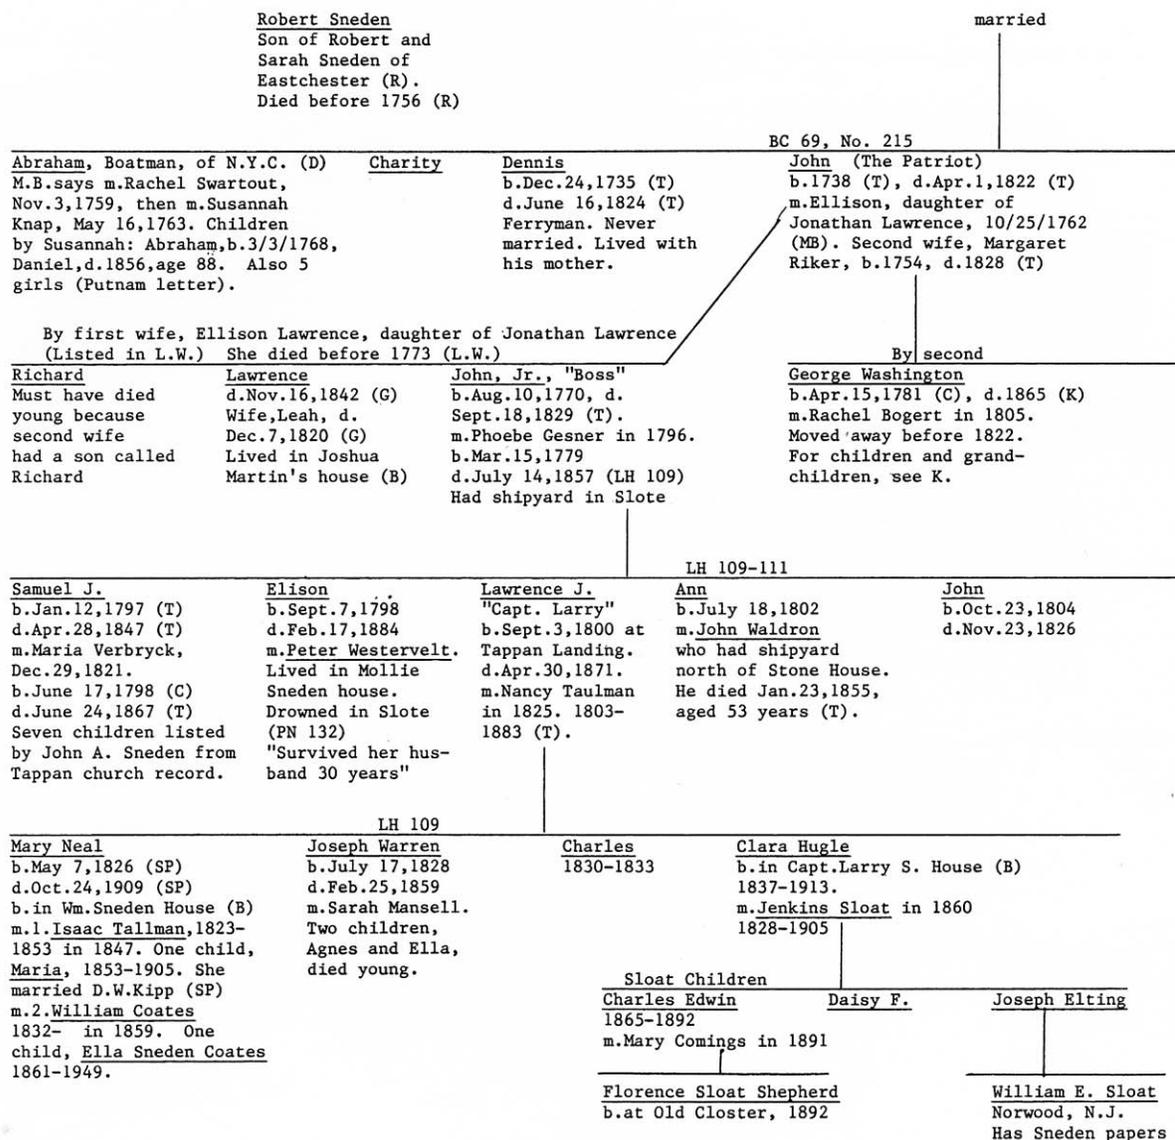

* July 1, 1834 to September 28, 1834. Prior to this period the diary is too fragmentary to provide us with a running account and subsequently Gesner discontinued keeping accounts in the diary. For the three months his reported income was 6.41 and his expenses 13.52. He received no income at all during September. Conventionally, he kept his accounts in pounds, shillings, and pence.

THE WILLSEY FAMILY OF FALISADES

The first American Willsey was Hendrick Martensen Wiltz, born on the Atlantic on the way from Holland in 1623. He married Maria Meyarts, had 5 children. One son, Jacob, born 1676 in Newtown, L.I., married Abigail Ferguson. They had 8 children, including Jan, born in Phillipsburgh, N.Y., in 1712. He married Hannah Odell of Tappan, and their 5 children were recorded in Tappan. One of these, Jacob, born 1734, married Abigail Farseur, had 4 children, and later signed the Patriotic Association in 1774. His son, Peter, was the last in the family to speak Dutch.
